PATRICK PARROT'S UNNATURAL HISTORY

TRANSLATED FROM THE ANIMAL LANGUAGE

WHY THE EAGLE IS KING

PAT PARROT was sitting on the topmost limb of his tree, looking upwards.

"My!" said Pat. "He certainly is flying high today!"

"Who's flying high?" said Roscoe Raccoon.

"Egbert Eagle," said Pat. "He's just a speck in the sky!"

"Something wrong with your eyesight," said Roscoe. "That's no eagle—it's a hawk!"

"You're BOTH wrong," said a powerful voice behind them. "It's a June bug!"

Roscoe and Pat turned around in surprise, for it was Egbert Eagle himself who had spoken.

"How do you do, Your Majesty?" said Pat. "We are honored by your presence!"

"Yeah—I mean—yes, Your Majesty," said Roscoe. "But how do you know that's a June bug?"

"I can prove it," said Egbert. He soared fifty feet up into the air, grabbed the tiny speck with his beak, and was back in an instant, the bug still in his mouth.

"Here," said he. "Somebody take him! He's tickling me!"

"Not me!" said Pat, in wonder and admiration.

"Me, neither!" said Roscoe. "You certainly have keen eyes, Egbert!"

Egbert dropped the bug, who flew off in a big hurry.

"That's nothing at all," said Egbert. "We eagles can see for MILES!"

"No wonder you're King of the Air," said Roscoe. Then turning to Pat, he asked, "Was the eagle always king?"

"Indeed not!" said Pat, who had been expecting this question. "Time was when the eagle was just another bird. Of course, this was millions of years ago, and it was Egbert's great-great ancestor, Elton Eagle, who was crowned the first King of the Birds.

"In those times, eagles were not at all as they are today. Nowadays they make their homes in mountaintops, and they can fly for hundreds of miles without trouble. They are strong and fierce and proud. But in Elton's time they were weak and timid and meek. And they were flightless. Why, they couldn't even get off the ground—their wings were so useless!"

"Elton was still a young eagle when he decided to leave the nest and see the world. Since the nest was on the ground, all he had to do was step out of it. That's just what he did—backwards! And as he waved goodbye to his mother, he kept on walking backwards. Suddenly, he bumped into something.

"'OOPS!' said Elton. 'Excuse me!'

"'LOOK OUT!' yelled his mother. 'DON'T LET HIM KICK YOU!'

"Elton turned around and saw a big ostrich. The ostrich was very angry.

"'I'LL TEACH YOU NOT TO BUMP INTO PEOPLE!" screamed the ostrich.

"Elton ran around in front of the ostrich, to get out of the way of his kicking.

"'LOOK OUT!' yelled his mother again. 'He kicks—'

"But she was too late. The ostrich pulled back a leg and gave Elton a terrific kick. Off went Elton, head over heels! He landed fifty feet away KERSPLASH in a brook! A minute later his mother pulled the shivering Elton out.

"'Who ever heard of an animal kicking frontwards?' sputtered Elton.

"'Ostriches do!' said his mother. 'Come along with me quickly, before you catch cold.'

"She took him to a rocky place where the sun shone relentlessly down, burning hot.

"'You stay right here until you dry out,' said his mother.

"'It's too hot!' complained Elton. 'And anyway, I'm going to tackle that ostrich and make him apologize!'

"'Oh, no you're not!' said his mother. 'Nobody EVER apologizes to eagles—
ESPECIALLY OSTRICHES! We eagles are too weak and helpless! Why, we can't even fly!'

"'Neither can the ostrich!' said Elton.

"'But look at the size of him!' said his mother. 'He's ten times as big as you are, and he's afraid of no one.'

"'I'm not afraid of anybody, either!' said Elton.

"'Nonsense!' said his mother. 'Eagles are afraid of everybody. Now, you just stay here on these hot rocks until you're good and dry. I'll be back later.'

"So Elton stayed there. But he didn't like it very well.

"'Gosh, it's awful hot!' said Elton. Then he had an idea how to cool off.

"He started flapping his wings and fanning his body with them. Faster and faster they flapped. Then suddenly a strange thing happened. Elton started to rise straight up into the air, like a helicopter. He was FLYING!

"He went up about twenty or thirty feet, but his wings got tired. Down he flopped, landing on his feet. He tried it again. This time he grabbed the branch of a tree with his beak as he started to fall downwards. He held on with all his might, but his beak was weak, too, and down he flopped again.

"Well, the next couple of weeks, Elton kept practicing. His wings became stronger, and he could stay up longer. Then, because he landed on his feet so hard and so often, his claws became strong, too. Holding on to the branches by his beak soon made it powerful, also. Elton had only one thought in mind all this time—that was to make that ostrich sorry for having kicked him.

"A few weeks later there was a bird convention, for the purpose of selecting the King of the Birds. The bird who was chosen for the honor was the biggest bird of all—the ostrich! All the birds went looking for him to tell him the good news. When they found him, however, they changed their minds and made Elton king, instead. And the ostrich never knew anything about it. His head was buried in the ground. He was hiding—hiding from Elton!

"For there, up in the air above him, was Elton, zooming down on the ostrich, dropping stones and pebbles and buzzing him like an airplane! The ostrich was terrified!

"When the birds saw Elton Eagle lording it over the biggest bird on earth, there was nothing to do but crown him king! And the eagle has been King of the Birds ever since," finished Pat Parrot, with a twinkle in his eyes.

"Hmph!" grunted Roseoe Raccoon. "I know who's the King of the Fibbers—the parrot!" Then his eyes began to twinkle, too. "But it was a good story, anyway!" he said.
